Preparatory Document for the Synod on Young People, the Faith and Vocational Discernment 2018

New Generations

Today's generation of young people live in a world, which is different from that of their parents and educators. Economic and social changes have affected the gamut of obligations and opportunities. Young people's aspirations, needs, feelings and manner of relating to others have changed as well. Furthermore, from a certain point of view, young people, because of globalisation, tend to be more homogeneous in all parts of the world. Nevertheless, they remain in their local surroundings and their unique cultural and institutional settings, which have repercussions in the process of socializing and forming a personal identity.

The challenge of multi-culturalism is present in a special way in the world of young people; for example, with the special features of "second generations" (that is, those young people who grow up in a society and a culture different from those of their parents, as a result of migration) or, in a certain sense, the children of "mixed" parents (from the vantage point of ethnicity, culture and / or religion).

In many parts of the world, young people are experiencing particular hardships which pose difficulties for them in making real choices in life, because they have not even the minimal possibility to exercise freedom. This situation includes young people experiencing poverty and exclusion; those who grow up without parents or family, or are unable to go to school; children and young boys and girls who live on the street in many suburbs; the young who are unemployed, displaced persons and migrants; those who are victims of exploitation, trafficking and slavery; children and young people forcefully recruited in criminal gangs or as guerilla fighters; and child brides or girls forced to marry against their will. Too many in the world pass directly from childhood to adulthood and a burden of responsibility they were unable to choose. Oftentimes, female children, little girls and young women face even greater difficulties than their peers.

Teen Reps Wanted!

We're looking for young people in our parish to start a youth ministry team! Currently, after our teens have made their Confirmation, there's nothing for them to plug into. We'd like to arrange events for the youth of the parish every few months and need a team of volunteers. We want our teens to plan the events and our adults to make it happen.

Teens - what do you want? Grab a couple of mates and join our team so that we can ensure we put on great events for you.

If you're interested (whether a teen or an adult) or want to know more, please email madelinepage@hotmail.co.uk or text 07875 710229.
